Check the Bug:

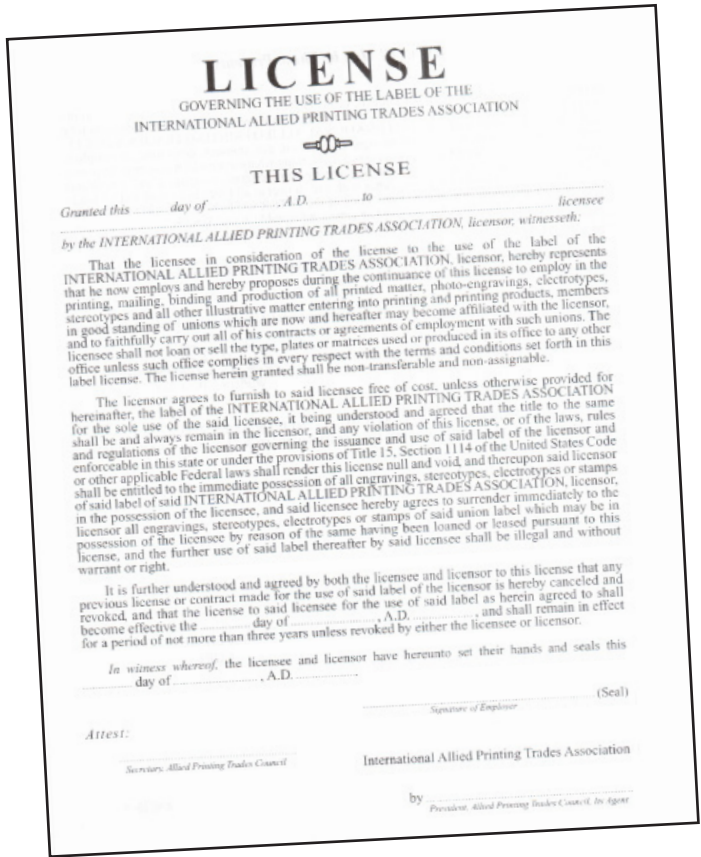

Does the Union Bug really look like the one you see above? Sometimes the difference is in the details. You wouldn't accept at twenty-five dollar bill no matter how good it looked otherwise.

The Union Bug:

The Union Bug is a registered trademark. Each licensed shop is to use a specific label and number. That label and number is to be clearly legible. Any variation is a violation of a registered trademark. No number? No ®? Not clearly legible? You should question the "label's" legitimacy.

Is the label License current?

To legally add the Union Bug to printing a shop must hold a current license authorizing its use. That license is valid for no more than three years from date of issue. Thereafter it must be renewed before expiration. No current license? No legal authority to include the union bug to their printing. Protect yourself from embarrassing questions about your printing. Ask to see the shop's current license.

Insist that your printing carry the Union Label

The Union Bug:

Is the Union Bug on your printing large enough to be read by the unaided eye (vision corrected, of course)? Often, people who forge union labels make it too small to be read so you will just assume it is legitimate.

The Union Bug:

Does the Union Bug on your printing show the geographic area where the print shop is located? If it doesn't tell where it was printed you should ask what else aren't they telling you.
